Equity Markets

- Global equity markets ended lower last week, amid worries about slowdown in global economic growth. UK markets ended in negative territory in the last week, amid concerns about surging inflation and economic growth. On the data front, UK's Halifax house prices climbed as expected in May, while the nation's services PMI dropped less than market forecast in May. Further, UK's consumer inflation expectations rose in May, while the nation's BRC like-for-like retail sales fell less than expected in May. European markets finished in the red during the week, after the European Central Bank (ECB) announced plans to start rising interest rates from July. On the macro front, Euro-zone's gross domestic product (GDP) grew at a faster than expected pace in first quarter 2022, while the region's Sentix investor confidence index improved in June. Separately, Germany factory orders unexpectedly dropped in April, while the nation's industrial production advanced less than expected in April. US markets closed on a weaker footing in the previous week, after the US Treasury yields rose above the psychologically important level of 3%. On the economic front, the US weekly initial jobless claims advanced to a 5-month high in the week ended 03 June 2022, while the nation's consumer sentiment index declined in June. Also, the US goods and services trade deficit narrowed in April, while the US consumer price index (CPI) accelerated in May. Asian markets finished mostly higher during the week.
- In the UK, the FTSE 100 index fell 2.9% to end the week at 7,317.52, while the FTSE 250 declined 3.0% to close at 19,673.32.
- Amongst European markets, the DAX shed 4.8% to finish the week at 13,761.83.
- In the US, DJIA lost 4.6% to end the week at 31,392.79, and the S&P 500 index slid 5.1% to end at 3,900.86.

Currency Markets

- The EUR ended lower against the USD, after the ECB signalled plans to raise rates in July and September.
- The GBP ended lower against the USD, after UK's construction PMI declined to a 4-month low in May.
- The USD ended higher against its peers, after the US inflation climbed to its highest level since 1981 in May.
- The GBP fell 1.4% against the USD to finish at 1.2315, while the EUR declined 1.9% against the USD to close at 1.0519.

Gold

- Gold prices rose last week, amid surge in US consumer prices.
- Gold prices advanced 1.4% to close the week at $1,875.50/oz.

Commodities

- Brent oil prices gained last week, after Saudi Arabia raised crude oil prices.
- Brent crude oil prices rose 1.9% to $122.01/barrel.

Corporate News and Updates

- Healthcare sector stocks gained a lot of attention last week. Mediclinic International rejected a takeover offer worth £3.41 billion from a consortium including Remgro and MSC Mediterranean Shipping Company. Peer, AstraZeneca announced positive results of Covid-19 treatment Evusheld in TACKLE Phase III treatment trial.
- In other corporate news, National Express Group announced that it is on track to meet its annual revenue target and reinstated its short-term guidance.

Saturday News

Flights chaos to get worse, warn easyJet pilots:

EasyJet pilots have warned that the worst of the disruption affecting its operations could be yet to come. A letter to the airline's Chief Executive written by the easyJet branch of the French SNPL pilots' union says that its members believe disruption to the airline's flights this summer has yet to peak, a situation it describes as a "frightening prospect".

Google and Apple face scrutiny over 'stranglehold' on mobiles:

The dominance of Apple and Google in the mobile phones market is facing further scrutiny from the competition watchdog. The giant technology groups "hold all the cards" when it comes to how people use mobile phones, the Competition and Markets Authority has claimed. After a year-long study into Google and Apple's mobile systems, the regulator is planning to further investigate the dominance of their web browsers and Apple's restrictions on "cloud gaming" — streaming games directly from a website rather than via an app.

EasyJet stuck on tarmac as chaos continues:

Johan Lundgren was telling investors that easyJet was "building resilience" into its operations. The aim, the airline's Chief Executive said, was to halt the cancellations and disruption suffered by its passengers during the reawakening of the aviation industry after the end of pandemic travel restrictions. However, hardly a news bulletin goes by without new tales of woe from customers who have had their holidays ruined or travel plans ditched because flights have been scratched.

Workers rediscover their militant tendencies:

Workplace militancy is back in vogue across Britain as unions take on employers over below-inflation pay packages and other issues with renewed confidence. "There are little fires everywhere," Kevin Rowan, head of organisation at the Trades Union Congress, said. "People are struggling to make ends meet on the back of two to three years of pay stagnation in the private sector and longer in the public sector."

GSK trial of RSV vaccine shows positive results:

Positive trial results for an eagerly awaited respiratory vaccine have been published by GSK, providing a significant boost for a key pipeline drug ahead of the company's break-up next month. The FTSE 100 drugs group said that its vaccine candidate for RSV, or respiratory syncytial virus, for adults aged over 60 was the first to show "statistically significant and clinically meaningful efficacy" in an interim analysis of a phase III trial.

ProCook stirs pot with profit warning:

The soaring cost of living has forced ProCook to halve its profit expectations in a warning that sent shares in the kitchenware business down by 40%. The setback came only eight months after ProCook had taken advantage of a Covid-19 sales boom with a stock market listing that valued it at £158 million. Daniel O'Neill, the founder, and his family made about £85 million from selling shares in the listing at 145p.

Bank of England tells lenders they are no longer 'too big to fail':

The Bank of England has declared that Britain's biggest lenders are no longer "too big to fail", despite finding shortcomings in crisis contingency plans drawn up by HSBC, Lloyds Banking Group and Standard Chartered. Threadneedle Street said that its first assessment of banks' emergency preparations for another financial crisis had concluded that the country's eight largest lenders could all be allowed to fail without the need for a taxpayer bailout.

Octopus Energy enters bidding for Bulb:

Octopus Energy, Britain's fourth biggest energy supplier, has made a late entry in a race to buy Bulb, the collapsed electricity and gas supplier. Centrica, the owner of British Gas, and Masdar, an Abu Dhabi-based energy company, are also in talks with the government as it tries to secure bids ahead of a closing deadline on June 30, according to the Financial Times.

Tesla stock split proposal goes to vote:

Tesla has proposed a three-to-one stock split in the form of a stock dividend, according to a regulatory filing. The electric car maker said the proposal will be put to a vote on August 4 and, if approved, would be the latest after a five-for-one split in August 2020.

Hut investors close door on board suitor:

The board director trying to buy THG for less than half its listing price faced a small rebellion at the ecommerce group's shareholder meeting. Iain McDonald, 51, of Belerion Capital, has been a non-executive director of the Manchester-based company since 2010; however, 8.95% of shareholders who voted were against his re-election.

Sunday News

Thousands still living in homes with unsafe cladding:

Only 6% of flats with flammable cladding have been made safe five years after the Grenfell Tower tragedy that killed 72 people. As many as 641,000 residents are living in 345,000 properties that remain at risk from a potentially fatal fire, according to analysis of official housing data. The revelation comes as the bill for the public inquiry into Britain's worst postwar residential blaze passed £150 million, including more than £61 million spent on lawyers representing victims and their families.

Dementia sufferers given false hope by 'clickbait cures':

"Clickbait cures" for dementia are giving false hope to millions of people around the world, experts have warned. Alzheimer's Disease International (ADI), a federation of 105 dementia associations globally, has identified 4,000 media stories published this year that falsely suggest champagne, coffee, chocolate and other diets ward off dementia.

HSBC investor Ping An eyes £22 billion boost from bank's break-up:

HSBC could generate $26.5 billion (£22 billion) of extra returns for shareholders if it spins out its Asian business, according to research to be used by disgruntled investor Ping An to ramp up its campaign to break up the bank.

Women still hit glass ceiling in the FTSE:

Smaller listed firms on the London Stock Exchange are falling behind in the push to put more women on boards, in a sign that a lack of diversity in business is still entrenched. More than 100 companies listed in London have all-male leadership teams, while the boards of almost 200 are entirely white, new research has found.

Morrisons to sell £600 million of fisheries and food factories:

The private equity owners of Morrisons are sounding out buyers for a portfolio of its warehouses, fisheries and food manufacturing plants that is expected to fetch more than £600 million. Clayton Dubilier & Rice (CD&R) is marketing the assets in a proposed sale-and-leaseback transaction designed to drive up returns from its £7 billion leveraged buyout of Morrisons.

Co-op Bank's head Nick Slape wants to reclaim its ethical crown — this time with profits:

Having spent the past decade trying to recover from its near-death experience following the “Crystal Methodist” drugs scandal of its then-chairman Paul Flowers, its current Chief Executive, Nick Slape, will unveil a revamped ethical policy in the hope of attracting new customers — and generating profits. The ethical stance has been a cornerstone of the bank since 1992, when it was the first lender to latch on to customers’ concerns about investing in countries with oppressive regimes.

Questor

The clever way to beat British inflation?

Buy American: “Buy land, they’re not making it any more,” quipped Mark Twain. That scarcity is the basis of value is an argument used by many, including this column, in support of assets such as gold and Bitcoin. But there’s another asset that they are not making any more: the American dollar. America’s central bankers are putting their money-printing spree decisively into reverse. In the aftermath of the financial crisis and during the pandemic they created tens of billions of electronic dollars each month and used those new dollars to buy bonds as a means to inject money into the financial system. They now plan to do the opposite: to sell the bonds and sit on the proceeds. This has the same effect as destroying the money they had previously created – it will no longer be in circulation and will do the digital equivalent of sitting in a locked vault. Money will therefore be taken out of the economy and, just as conventional economic thinking has it that creating money creates inflation, it also holds that destroying money reduces inflation. Now the world's central banks have been printing money for more than a decade so why are we seeing its inflationary effects only now? This is something we touched on in the Wealth Preserver column last year, when we pointed out that the newly created money had gone into the financial system, where it had indeed created inflation in asset prices, as opposed to into the real economy. The money created to deal with the pandemic was different: in Britain, for example, the new pounds were lent to the Government and used to pay for the furlough scheme, so they ended up in the pockets of people who, in most cases, promptly spent them.

Record U.K. petrol price risks a mass exodus of essential workers: The record increase in fuel prices could spark a mass exodus of staff who rely on their vehicles for work, trade unions and drivers have warned. The price of a litre of unleaded petrol hit 182.31p, meaning the cost of filling an average family car hit £100 for the first time. Some employees who need to drive for their jobs are spending as much as £350 a week on fuel and others are "paying to go to work".

Fine airlines that break U.K. compensation rules, demand passengers: Some of the thousands of people whose flights were cancelled or delayed during the half-term travel chaos have been told they will receive no compensation, leading to calls for a change to the way passengers are reimbursed ahead of what looks to be a chaotic summer for airlines.

Risk Warning & Disclaimer

CFD and Spread betting Risk Warning

All trading involves risk. Spread bets and CFDs are complex instruments and come with a high risk of losing money rapidly due to leverage. 66% of retail investor accounts lose money when trading spread bets and CFDs with this provider. You should consider whether you understand how spread bets and CFDs work, and whether you can afford to take the high risk of losing your money. Professional clients can lose more than they deposit.

Shares Risk Warning

The value of stocks and shares, and the income from them, can fall as well as rise and you may not get back the full amount you originally invested. Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance.

If you are unsure about dealing in shares and other equity investments, you should contact your financial adviser as these types of investments may not be suitable for everyone.
