Saturday News

Cryptocurrencies 'given halo effect' by Treasury, says former FCA Chief: The former Chairman of the Financial Conduct Authority has launched a highly critical attack on the Treasury, accusing it of being more interested in serving the interests of the speculative crypto industry than in protecting consumers. Charles Randell, who chaired the main financial regulator for four years until May 2022, likened trading in crypto currencies to "digital roulette", saying that it had no socially useful purpose and the only certainty was that "the house will win".

NatWest to pay Chief Executive bonus for first time since bailout: NatWest is poised to hand an annual cash bonus to its boss for the first time since its 2008 bailout after the taxpayer-backed bank reaped the benefit of rising interest rates last year. Dame Alison Rose stands to receive a bonus worth as much as £953,700 85% of her £1.12 million salary split between cash and shares. The potential payout is part of a package that could total as much as £4.7 million including other share awards.

Plan to sell Flybe's Heathrow slots hits turbulence: A row is brewing over the valuable Heathrow take-off and landing slots belonging to Flybe, the collapsed carrier, which were granted to the airline to boost U.K. connectivity but could now be used for flights to Europe and beyond. Plans to resuscitate the airline could be at odds with the government's policy of encouraging flights into and out of Heathrow from other U.K. airports and raise the question of who will benefit financially if the carrier flies again.

Paperchase creditors dealt £20 million bill: Paperchase's unsecured creditors have been left with a bill of about £20 million from its first period in administration after the business collapsed for a second time. Unsecured creditors from the retailer's previous insolvency have been notified that they will receive a dividend of 2.52% from the sale of assets that has been progressing since early 2021.

BP attacked over decision to scale back climate goals: BP's decision to water down its 2030 climate goals has been criticised by an influential investment group, even as the U-turn helped to propel the oil giant's share price to multi-year highs. Bernard Looney, Chief Executive, this week abandoned his much-vaunted plan to cut oil and gas output by 40% by 2030, saying that it would now reduce its output by a quarter. This will result in the group's carbon emissions falling less steeply than planned.

Blackrock Throgmorton admits falling short after avoiding bets against mid-caps: One of the U.K. stock market's best known investment vehicles for backing middle-sized UK growth companies has admitted to a bad year after bringing down its gearing too late and failing to take more advantage of its ability to take "down bets" on share prices. Blackrock Throgmorton, which has the flexibility to take short positions equivalent to 30% of its portfolio, said it lost more than £300 million in the year to last November after its investments in ambitious British medium-sized companies shrank by 31%.

Insurer Lancashire hit by $66 million Ukraine bill: The Lloyd's of London insurer Lancashire Holdings has suffered a surprise annual loss after taking a bigger than forecast hit of almost $66 million from the war in Ukraine. Insurers have been scrambling to assess their exposure to the conflict ever since Russia launched its invasion almost a year ago. They are potentially on the hook for everything from battle-damaged buildings and ships to claims made under credit insurance.

Ministers step up pace to ease insurers' capital rules: The government is seeking to accelerate a long-awaited overhaul of the rulebook for the insurance industry that ministers hope will release billions of pounds in capital for investment in the economy. In November, the Treasury set out its plan for a revamp of the so-called Solvency II regime, introduced when the U.K. was part of the European Union. The aim is to make it easier for insurers to invest in long-term projects such as infrastructure and renewable energy assets. However, the sector is worried about the speed of the overhaul, which is considered an important Brexit dividend for the economy.

U.K. 'not out of the wood' after narrowly avoiding recession: Chancellor Jeremy Hunt says the U.K. economy is not out of the woods yet, despite narrowly missing a recession in the last quarter. The U.K. narrowly avoided plunging into a recession last year, figures show, after the economy recorded zero growth in the last quarter of 2022.

Sunday News

SNP calls for 20% cut to energy bills: The SNP has called on the U.K. Government to slash energy bills by at least 20% this year, claiming "households are being forced to pay through the roof for Westminster failures". Ofgem, the independent regulator for the British energy market, confirmed the energy-price cap which changes every three months rose by 20% to £4,279 in January this year.

NHS nurses' strike action in England set to intensify: Nurses in England are preparing to escalate their dispute with the Government by involving staff from emergency departments, intensive care and cancer wards in the next round of industrial action.

Russia to cut oil output in response to western nations' price cap: Russia will cut oil production from next month in response to a price cap imposed by western nations, the country's top energy official has said, in the first sign Moscow is seeking to weaponise oil supplies after slashing natural gas exports to Europe last year. The cut of 500,000 barrels a day, the equivalent of almost 5% of Russia's production, or 0.5% of world supply, was a response to the "destructive energy policy of the countries of the collective west", Alexander Novak said.

NHS backlogs put Britain's medicine supplies at risk: For pharmacists across the U.K, keeping shelves stocked has become a battle. "Things like anti-allergy medicines, sleeping medicines, these are very common products that we're struggling to get hold of," says Leyla Hannbeck, Chief Executive of the Association of Independent Multiple Pharmacies.

Monzo tracks staff screen time with slackers called out in meetings:

The fintech company's internal "BizOps" system checks customer service staff every five minutes to see if they are using their computers, according to six sources. Hundreds of staff are required to be working on their devices 85% of the day and this "activity" metric is discussed at weekly one-to-one meetings with line managers.

Boost for homeowners as number of mortgage deals hits six-month high:

Mortgage availability has hit a six-month high as the number of loans on the market has returned to levels last seen before the mini-Budget. As the housing market slows, banks are battling to attract a dwindling pool of borrowers and have been cutting rates and expanding their product ranges in recent weeks. The number of residential mortgages on the market surged to 4,341 at the start of February, the best since August 2022, according to data company Moneyfacts. It has since climbed by a further 150 to hit 4,491.

British Gas charges customers nearly £500 million for not using direct debit:

Energy suppliers have been accused of needlessly charging households hundreds of pounds more on top of record-high bills simply because they have not set up a direct debit. MPs and campaigners have called for the regulator to take urgent action as calculations by Octopus Energy, a provider, found households paying by cash, cheque or bank transfer are being billed £1.3 billion a year more than those on direct debit. Roughly £482 million (37%) of that sum was billed to British Gas customers, according to analysis of the company's customer data by The Telegraph.

U.K. campaigners call for tighter regulations on vapes to match tobacco:

Vapes should be taxed and displayed in plain packaging behind the counter to reduce their popularity among children, health campaigners and councils have warned. To tackle the rapidly growing popularity among children and young people, Action on Smoking and Health (Ash) is calling on Jeremy Hunt, the Chancellor, to set out a £4 excise tax on single disposable vapes on top of the usual £4.99 price. The Local Government Association (LGA) is also requesting action, urging Ministers to tighten regulation on the display and marketing of vaping products to match tobacco.

Fury over record £3 billion profits at British Gas: Centrica's windfall comes in wake of soaring energy prices and row over payment meters:

British Gas owner Centrica is set to post record annual profits of around £3 billion this week. The huge profit haul, which comes after a row over debt collectors breaking into the homes of hard-up customers to instal pre-payment meters by force, will provoke a fresh round of accusations of profiteering by energy firms. The stunning profit figure for 2022 will be released when the company unveils its full-year results. Millions of British Gas customers, along with those of other providers, have been struggling to pay their energy bills as prices have soared due to the war in Ukraine.

Value of Britain's biggest pension fund plunges by £20 billion, more than a fifth of its entire value, after turmoil in financial markets pummelled its investments:

The value of Britain's biggest pension fund has plunged by £20 billion, more than a fifth of its entire value, after turmoil in financial markets pummelled its investments. The Universities Superannuation Scheme (USS) looks after the pensions of 460,000 higher education workers, past and present. It is one of few remaining defined benefit (DB) schemes still open to new joiners paying a pension based on a member's final salary.

Tesco head complains thousands of staff missing out on new training because of restrictions on government's Apprenticeship Levy fund:

Tesco's Chief Executive has complained that thousands of staff are missing out on new training because of restrictions on the Government's Apprenticeship Levy fund. Calling for urgent reform, Ken Murphy said stringent rules mean the supermarket chain is offering fewer apprenticeships than before the levy was introduced. He said the 'inflexible' fund 'needs work' as it 'puts entry level apprenticeships at a disadvantage over those who are already in management positions'.

New concerns for Bank of England over inflation: Latest figures expected to show prices remaining stubbornly high: Inflation figures due this week are expected to show prices remaining stubbornly high. The Consumer Price Index (CPI) measure of inflation stood at 10.5% in December. Forecasters say it may have eased slightly in January but remained above 10%. That could pose a headache for the Bank of England's Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) as it strives to bring CPI down to its 2% target.

Vodafone's dividend could be at risk after some of its markets were buffeted by economic turmoil and rampant inflation: Vodafone's dividend could be at risk after some of its markets were buffeted by economic turmoil and rampant inflation. The telecoms giant operates in several countries that have seen a surge in prices, including Turkey and Egypt. While the FTSE 100 firm currently has enough money to cover its dividend bill £2.2 billion last year the situation was 'not as comfortable as it appears', according to highly respected telecoms research firm Enders Analysis.

Watchdog to probe money laundering at Barclays: Scandal-hit bank faces huge fine for failing to detect financial crime: The financial watchdog has launched an investigation into Barclays' anti-money laundering practices. The Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) made the move last spring after noting the large number of suspected money laundering incidents at the bank. Barclays was issued a notice by the watchdog, demanding an independent review of its systems to prevent and detect financial crime. The process is known as a Section 166 or skilled person review – and usually involves an external accountancy or law firm investigating and producing a report with recommendations for improvements.
