Saturday News

Our profits may vanish, warns Amazon:

Amazon warned that its operating profits could be all but wiped out in the fourth quarter as it grapples with the highest inflation in a generation and intense competition. Shares in the group dropped 14.4%, or $15.97, to $94.99 during out-of-hours trading.

Strikes, rain and war put Glencore on back foot:

Glencore has reported weaker production than expected in the third quarter after its operations were affected by strikes, bad weather and disruption from the war in Ukraine.

NatWest braces for pain from faltering economy:

The head of NatWest warned of a worsening outlook for the economy after the bank set aside an extra £247 million for potential loan losses and said that house prices were likely to fall.

Computacenter still hit by supply woes:

Supply problems continue to affect business at Computacenter, which forecast only a small rise in profits this year. The provider of laptops and cloud computing services said its stock levels remained much higher than in 2021 and that this would not begin to be solved until well into next year. The company had said previously that it had been stockpiling inventory to sidestep problems in its supply chain and component shortages.

Sunday News

Job cut fears stalk Silicon Valley after Big Tech sell-off:

Fears are mounting of mass job cuts in the tech industry after profits plunged at the world's biggest companies as they grapple with a slowing global economy. Disappointing updates from a string of major firms last week led to $770 billion being wiped off the biggest tech stocks.

Ministers cool on bank windfall tax:

The government last night quashed suggestions that it is considering a windfall tax on banks as one of the measures to plug a hole in its finances at next month's budget.

Middle eastern shoppers help Harrods swing back to black:

Sales at Harrods are on track to recover to pre-pandemic levels amid a surge in demand for Rolex watches and Dior handbags. Managing director

Michael Ward said sales at the luxury department store this year were on course to hit the £870.8 million achieved in the year ending February 2020. Rising labour costs and energy bills means profits will not bounce back to the same extent, though.

Westminster turmoil propels an army of 'Spads' into big business:

Mike Lynch was battling to avoid extradition. The tech tycoon had enlisted an army of advisers to win him positive media coverage amid U.S. attempts to prosecute him on fraud charges. But in 2020, Lynch secured some extra help: he hired advisory firm Hanbury Strategy to lobby the government on behalf of Invoke Capital, his venture capital firm.

The California start-up that sucks water out of thin air:

In the coming weeks, the city of Coalinga, a sun-baked corner of central California, expects to run out of water. The annual allocation it receives from a network of dammed rivers, controlled by state authorities, was slashed by 80% due to extreme drought, and despite restrictions such as a ban on pools and lawn irrigation, the allocation is just about out.

Arm accused of 'disinformation' in legal spat with Qualcomm:

Cambridge chip designer Arm has been accused of an "aggressive misinformation campaign" against a U.S. semiconductor giant in an increasingly bitter legal row.

Saturday News

British Airways owner back in profit despite weeks of passenger misery:

The owner of British Airways, Aer Lingus and Iberia is back in profit, despite a summer of chaos and cancelled flights that stranded thousands of passengers, ruined holidays and saw fares skyrocket. International Consolidated Airlines Group (IAG) reported operating profits of £1 billion in the three months to 30 September, compared with a loss of £390 million the previous year.

Twitter will form 'content moderation council' says Elon Musk:

Twitter's new owner Elon Musk has said banned users will not be reinstated until after a review by a "content moderation council". Employees and users are waiting to hear more from Mr Musk about his plans for the platform, amid concerns over his support for loosening content moderation and reversing permanent bans on controversial accounts.

Inside Britain's battle to build its own naval ships: Save money or save British jobs. That is the dilemma facing Rishi Sunak as he prepares to make a decision on who will be given a £1.65 billion contract to provide three massive supply ships to the Royal Navy. The so-called "Fleet Solid Support" (FSS) vessels will provide Britain's new Queen Elizabeth class aircraft carriers with everything from munitions to food and spare parts.

Octopus Energy buys collapsed rival Bulb as households foot £4 billion bill: Octopus Energy has agreed to buy collapsed rival Bulb in a deal that could cost households £4 billion. Bulb's 1.5 million customers will be transferred to Octopus as part of the agreement which is believed to be the most expensive since the bailout of RBS in 2008.

Questor

It was a mistake to ever buy this stock – but is it a mistake to sell now?: When we wrote last month about Fulcrum Utility Services, we said in essence that things wouldn't get any worse and the shares, at 6.3p, were too cheap because investors had given up on them. How wrong we were. First came the news of a cyberattack, which knocked 4.4% off the share price. Then a profits warning caused the shares to lose 36%. They now stand at just 3.8p, a far cry from the 45.35p at which we added them to our IHT Portfolio in January 2019. Fulcrum acknowledged as much this week. While the cyberattack delayed some invoicing and cut managers off from information for a period, the real damage is being done by cost inflation and what the company called "ongoing challenges with the legacy and closure of historic projects", which this column imagines to be a reference to its smart meter business. It added: "While the new executive team's continuing priority is to protect and improve margins and refocus the group on its core utility infrastructure and asset ownership growth strategy, the group's challenges are historic in origin, have been long standing and are widespread. As such, the benefits of the business improvements introduced to date, and currently under way, are taking longer than anticipated to realise." The consequence is that Fulcrum now expects sales for the full year to be about £49 million, compared with £61.8 million last time, and losses on the "adjusted Ebitda" measure to be about £6m, against a profit on the same basis of £500,000 last year. Questor says: "Hold".

Banned British far-right figures return to Twitter within hours of takeover: Key figures on Britain's far right who were previously banned from Twitter have been able to open new accounts, apparently without restrictions, after the platform's takeover by Elon Musk. Britain First, an extreme group whose leader has spent time in jail for hate crimes against Muslims, rejoined the social media network. It had been banned in 2017 under Twitter's hate speech rules after posting inflammatory anti-Muslim videos. Some videos posted by its then deputy leader were retweeted by U.S. president Donald Trump.

Brexit red tape puts brakes on U.K. innovation and EU sales: British inventions are being brought to market overseas because new Brexit safety certification rules mean they can't be sold in the U.K. Trade bodies and entrepreneurs have blamed the government's decision to stop accepting the European Union's CE mark and instead create a new U.K. Conformity Assessed (UKCA) mark showing that a product is safe.

Rishi Sunak hires ITV head of U.K. news as communications Chief: Rishi Sunak has hired Amber de Botton as his director of communications, Downing Street confirmed, in the latest in a series of appointments made by the Prime Minister in his first week in office.

'Underpaid, undervalued': March of the Mummies protests take place across

U.K.: Thousands gathered in Trafalgar Square for the March of the Mummies protest against a childcare structure that many say is setting parents, children and society up for failure. Among them, swathed in gauze and pushing his two-year-old's stroller, were Laurence Parkes and his family, who described raising two children in London as expensive: a monthly cost including nursery and after-school care that nears the family's mortgage payments.

Ovo Chief faces quiz over £27 million loan: Energy firm's billionaire founder refuses to answer questions over loan - and auditors raise red flag: The parent company of Britain's third-largest energy retailer paid out £27 million in loans to its directors last year, new documents reveal. Imagination Industries – owner of Ovo Group, which has 4.5 million energy customers – has just two directors. One is billionaire founder and Chief Executive Stephen Fitzpatrick and the other is Chief Financial Officer Vincent Casey.

Wheels come off as Peloton loses £81 million: Bikes and workouts exploded in popularity during pandemic due to Covid restrictions and gym closures: The U.K. arm of luxury exercise bike group Peloton racked up an £81 million loss months before the firm went into crisis last November. Peloton's bikes and workouts – with fans including Prime Minister Rishi Sunak and tennis star Venus Williams – exploded in popularity during the pandemic due to Covid restrictions and gym closures.

Shell in 'pro-gay rights hypocrisy' over Qatar: Oil giant to invest £1.3 billion into North Field South project: Shell is being accused of hypocrisy for vaunting its pro-gay credentials online while pouring billions of pounds into Qatar's homophobic regime. The oil giant has dedicated a section of its website to highlighting its 'support for LGBT+' equality. But critics have rounded on the £170 billion firm after it unveiled the latest stage of a partnership with state-owned QatarEnergy.

Phone firm EE plans car and travel insurance: U.K.'s largest mobile network in ambitious expansion strategy: The U.K.'s largest mobile network EE could be offering travel and car insurance within the next two years as part of an ambitious expansion strategy. The company is understood to be looking at providing cover for gadgets such as smartphones before eventually widening to other types of insurance.

Shell Chief to receive compensation for loss of office: The outgoing Chief Executive of oil and gas giant Shell is to receive a year's salary by way of compensation for loss of office. Ben van Beurden will receive £1.42 million when he steps down at the end of this year, which is to be paid in six instalments. Shell said outstanding payments will be reduced by 50% if he secures a paid position, excluding non-executive directorships, in that time.

NatWest says house prices to fall next year: Pre-tax profits at NatWest, the owner of Royal Bank of Scotland, remained flat at £1.1 billion during the third quarter of this year as higher bad debt provisions and the cost of exiting its Irish business weighed on rising income from higher interest rates.

Risk Warning & Disclaimer

CFD and Spread betting Risk Warning

All trading involves risk. Spread bets and CFDs are complex instruments and come with a high risk of losing money rapidly due to leverage. 66% of retail investor accounts lose money when trading spread bets and CFDs with this provider. You should consider whether you understand how spread bets and CFDs work, and whether you can afford to take the high risk of losing your money. Professional clients can lose more than they deposit.

Shares Risk Warning

The value of stocks and shares, and the income from them, can fall as well as rise and you may not get back the full amount you originally invested. Past performance is not necessarily a guide to future performance.

If you are unsure about dealing in shares and other equity investments, you should contact your financial adviser as these types of investments may not be suitable for everyone.
